

Early Journal Content on JSTOR, Free to Anyone in the World

This article is one of nearly 500,000 scholarly works digitized and made freely available to everyone in the world by JSTOR.

Known as the Early Journal Content, this set of works include research articles, news, letters, and other writings published in more than 200 of the oldest leading academic journals. The works date from the mid-seventeenth to the early twentieth centuries.

We encourage people to read and share the Early Journal Content openly and to tell others that this resource exists. People may post this content online or redistribute in any way for non-commercial purposes.

Read more about Early Journal Content at <http://about.jstor.org/participate-jstor/individuals/early-journal-content>.

JSTOR is a digital library of academic journals, books, and primary source objects. JSTOR helps people discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content through a powerful research and teaching platform, and preserves this content for future generations. JSTOR is part of ITHAKA, a not-for-profit organization that also includes Ithaka S+R and Portico. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org.

Neurology.

THOMAS HILL URQUHART, M. D.

F. J. SCHAUFELBERGER, M. D., Hastings, Nebraska.

Dr. Thomas Hill Urquhart, of Hastings, Nebraska, was born in North Carolina in July, 1829. He died at his home in Hastings, Nebraska, June 19, 1892, at the age of 63, surrounded by his entire family. While he was still quite young his family removed with him to Virginia, where he received an academic education, at the University of Virginia. He then matriculated at the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, from which he received the degree of M. D. in 1848.

Dr. Urquhart now entered the practice of his profession in the "Old Dominion," and while thus engaged was made a member of the Virginia senate, both before and after the secession of the State. On the breaking out of the civil war, Dr. Urquhart became a surgeon, with the rank of major, on the staff of General Lee, and was at various times stationed on Craney island and at Richmond.

In 1874 Dr. Urquhart removed to Nebraska for the benefit of his health, and located at Hastings, then a little hamlet on the frontier, and soon acquired the reputation of being the foremost physician of that section. Two years later he was appointed United States pension examiner, and in 1878 was appointed insanity commissioner, both of which positions he held until his death. His declining years were devoted chiefly to microscopy, and he became quite expert in the management of the finest objectives, which is the more remarkable when we learn that he never used a microscope before 1887. He became a member of the American Society of Microscopists in 1890, and was in constant correspondence with American and foreign microscopists and scientists, and was a contributor to various medical journals.

The funeral rites were conducted in St. Mark's Episcopal church, Silas A. Strickland Post, G. A. R., attending in a body. A local paper, in commenting on his death, says: "While it was true that during the war he was united with the cause of his native State, he was none the less a patriotic citizen of the North and highly respected by all old soldiers who knew him. As a physician, he had few, if any, equals in the State of Nebraska."

HENRY WELD FULLER.

From PHARMACEUTICAL RECORD, July 9, 1892.

Mr. Fuller came from the original Mayflower colony who landed at Plymouth, Massachusetts, his forefather in that little band being Samuel Fuller, whose son, Henry W., became judge in those days. On his mother's side the family also date back to the same distinguished colony, and John Alden and "Priscilla" Mullens were the ancestors of Chief Justice Weston, of Maine, whose daughter was Mr. Fuller's mother.

Mr. Fuller was born in Augusta, Maine, April 7, 1831. After a preliminary education he entered Bowdoin College, and in the course of his college studies gave special attention to chemistry under the guidance of Professor Cleveland, to whom he was greatly attached. Later he entered a drug store, and after he had acquired a knowledge of the business he purchased the store of George W. Ladd, in Bangor, Maine.

About the same time he married Sarah H. Ladd, whose fame as a musician, poet, and writer will be remembered by many, and whose genial character lent a charm to their happy wedded life. Five years passed by and they removed to Chicago, where very shortly afterward he entered the house of Fuller & Finch, a growing wholesale drug house. Soon afterward his name was added to the firm, and later the firm of Fuller & Fuller became one of the largest and most influential of Western drug houses. His business interest with